Origins of modern milk-marketing methods. Vol. III, Issue 1-1936. Deals with the progress which has been made in providing the public with pure milk. As the film opens with views of milk being delivered, the commentator states that though milk is the most healthful of foods, it is also potentially the most dangerous. The practices of the old-time dairy farmer are suggested in shots of milking in a dirty barn, and crude methods of straining the milk. A short sequence deals with the story of the achievement of Dr. Sedgwick, who in 1892 traced a typhoid epidemic in Springfield, Mass., to contaminated milk. The film indicates that after Dr. Sedgwick's discovery, an intensive drive was undertaken to guard the milk supply. A modern dairy farm is pictured - cows in the stanchions, being washed, and being milked by machine. In the closing sequence milk practices in this country are contrasted with those of France. The commentator states that in France milk distribution methods are 40 years behind this country.
